Introduction

When a Freshman enters school
With a quaking in his heart
He's resolved to do all tasks,
And in life to make a start.
How he works! He digs, he crams,
Burning up the midnight oil,
Planning how he'll get to be
President by all his toil.

When a Sophomore he becomes,
With a much inflated head,
Now he only works and crams
In exams, — or so 'tis said.
Hops and parties fill his mind,
And his study hours are few,
President is too much work;
So a Gov'norship will do.

Next a Junior, worldly wise,
With a jaunty carefree air,
Four semesters he's behind,
Yet he doesn't seem to care.
He is perfectly content
With his marks, however slim;
For instead of Governor,
Mayor seems more fit for him.

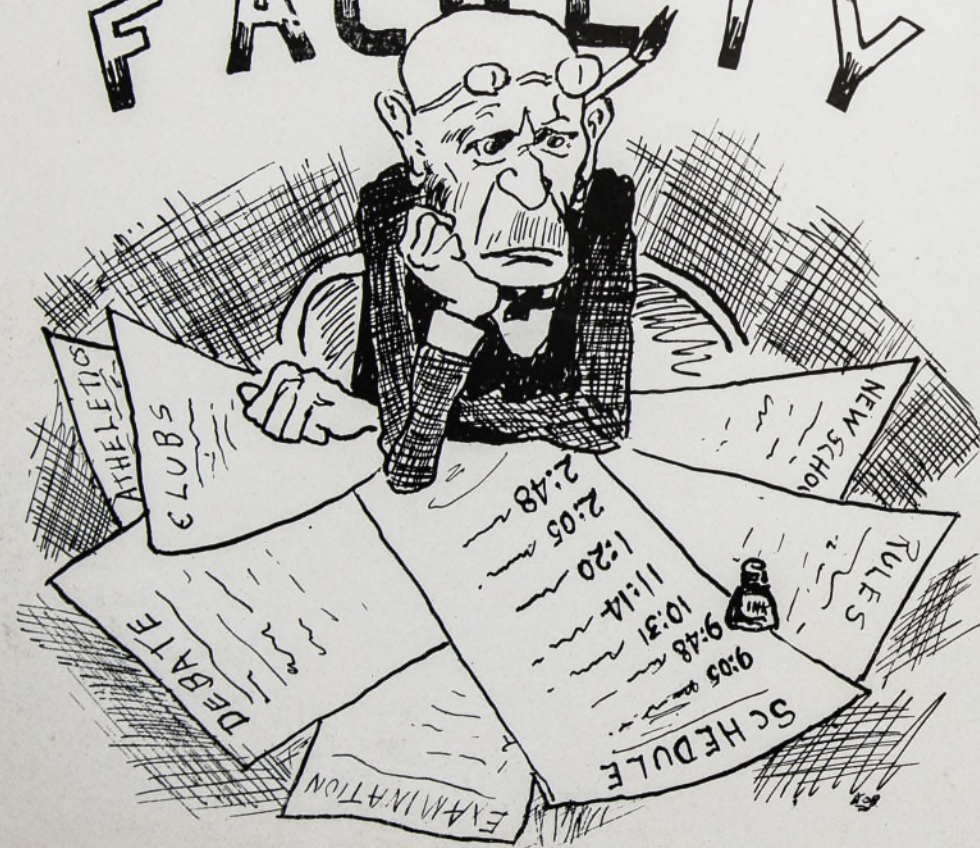

Now a Senior, and, Oh my!
He has reached the goal at last,
Knowledge vast, he has acquired,—
It would make the world aghast.
But he's through with hops and spreads,
Through with every high school joy.
For he feels it would be luck,
Just to be an office boy.

Do you know there's lots o' people
Settin' round in this here school,
Growlin' like the very dickens,
Disobeyin' every rule?
Don't you be that kind o' cattle,
'Cause they ain't no use on earth;
Now just be a rooster, booster,
Crow and boost for all you're worth.

If your school needs boosting, booster,
Don't sit 'round and wait and see
It some other feller's willin',
Sail right in this country's free.
Cast your loaves upon the waters,
They'll come back the sayin's true,
Mebbe they'll come back all buttered
When some feller boosts fer you.

Class Poem

Up rugged paths and steep we've climbed
To reach the mountain smiling,
Nor turned aside for pleasure's call,
So honeyed and beguiling.
Each heart was bound by purpose deep,
Like bands of steel entwining,
To reach the prize on heights above,
A prize in radiance shining.

The heights are reached toward which we toiled
In dark and sunny weather.
Then must we part forgetting all
The days thus passed together?
O say not so as in the past
Class spirit we kept burning,
Let now a purpose quite as strong
Mark every year's returning.

A purpose deep and well defined
Within each heart's recesses
To help the world along, nor pause
For pleasure's false caresses.
To freely give the world our best,
To this our word is plighted,
In this as in all other things
We stand a class united.

Class History

Early in September in the year 1912, we climbed the high school steps for the first time. Such a bonny and hopeful class as we were! Talk about Freshmen being overawed by the airs and grace of the sedate Seniors! Why, the Seniors were not in it with those Freshmen in our opinion, at least. We were greater in number than they and in fact great enough to help out some needy Seniors. We entered upon our first year's work with the "bliss born of ignorance" and powerful because of it. Before we proceeded far, however, we discovered that high school work is not all bliss, but a great share of it good hard work. Most of us withstood the trials and pressed on perseveringly, though a few gave up and were obliged to fall behind their comrades.

We passed through Freshmen year safely and the following September appeared as Sophomores. And oh, our dignity and importance in our own eyes! We were continually thinking, "Well, now, we have one class to look down upon." With wonderful ease, we forgot all about ever being Freshmen. We soon began to show our intelligence in many ways. Our original Caesar translations simply delighted our teachers, and the ease with which we worked our geometry problems led the remaining classes to believe that we possessed great genius. Soon we decided upon a class organization. Inez Moser was chosen president and Harry Moore, vice president; Ruth Windom, secretary; and Jessie Narigon, treasurer. Avanelle Gidley, Ida Devers, and Jessie were appointed on the committee for class colors, and to them we owe the suggestion of our royal purple and white. Ralph, Bill and Harry arranged a code of by-laws, which the class, after some discussion, decided to follow during the remaining years. Then, did we feel dignified indeed, as an organized class in Nodaway High School. When the class color troubles began in the spring, no one doubted that our class was the bravest in the high school and that our flag was on the building our share of the time. Why, two of the members even ventured to climb on the building one afternoon during school hours! Of course, the principal considered this such a clever act that they were suspended from school for two days. When we settled down to work again before we could realize it, another year had slipped by and we returned to school the next year as Juniors.

During Junior year, we struggled through the advanced branches of learning. Since we now held the important position of Junior Class, we felt that we should do something to distinguish ourselves. First, we succeeded in having three members of our class on the society debating teams. Also, we had more successful parties than any of the classes. Lastly, we gave the first Junior-Senior banquet given by Nodaway High School students.

Our Senior year was a hard one, indeed. We were so occupied with our studies that we had little time for social affairs. We did, however, enjoy basketball. Our motto, "At the Foothills, Climbing," showed our intention of perseverance when we finished high school. Although we had many enjoyable times, this last year was tinged with regret by the thought of leaving the teachers with whom we had become such friends, and the dear old high school itself.

"Amat" or "Just Juniors"

Yes, it is a self-evident fact that Harold Wilson was in love with Vivian. He was, I say. The cause for his change of affection he knew not, but it came to him in an instant. This is the way it happened.

Harold was sitting alone in his study room with his book on one knee, but his mind was not on his lesson. He was dreaming of Vivian and of the happy days gone by. He was longing for her company, but an evil spirit stole into the door and whispered in a soft, still voice that sank to the very depths of his heart, "Harold, she is frivolous. She is not far from you," and slipped out the window. Yes, this is the whole tale.

But for some reason he could not study. All the colors of the rainbow began to whirl before him in dazzled forms. The situation became so serious that he called upon his confidential friend, Harold Parcher. Of course everyone calls upon "Parcher" when in need of sound, common sense advice. Parcher, not understanding the situation and being unable to compel Harold to answer his questions, sat down and watched him. Harold raved, walked back and forth across the room as if he had two left feet, muttering to himself and finally fell exhausted into a chair.

After several attempts Parcher succeeded in having Harold answer "yes" and "no" to his questions. Oh, now! Parcher has solved the question. He was in love. Upon mentioning this to Harold, he quieted down and would listen to reason for he knew this was the trouble. Yes, Harold was in love, but with what? Parcher reasoned, however, after the manner of wise men, if he set down the name of what he was in love with, it ought to produce a curious affect upon his heart.

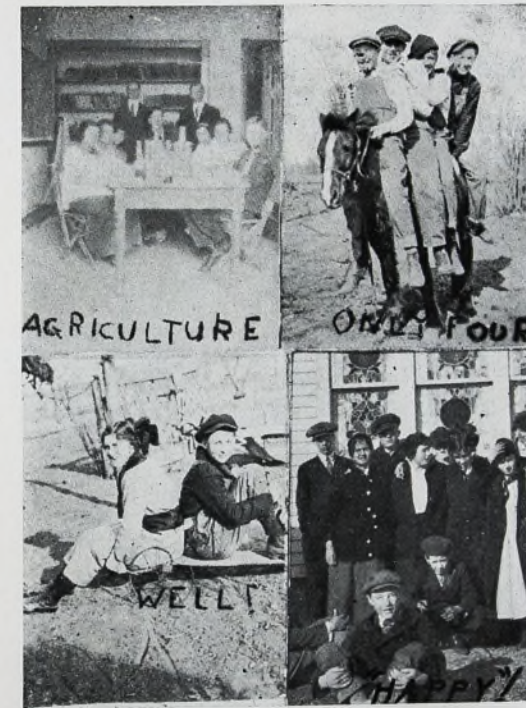

So we find him setting down the list.
First his bicycle.

But no it was not that, for his heart steadfastly refused to do anything but its normal work. He must seek further. For five minutes no sound was heard but the wild breathing of Harold. Harold sat staring at Parcher for inspiration. Suddenly he gave a mighty whoop, and grabbing Parcher about the neck, began a mad dance around the room. He had solved the mystery. He was in love with his English. He remembered the wonderful glance of approval from his English teacher's entrancing eyes, when he gave his extemporaneous speech on "Burns." But was it possible? He was mistaken. No, it was not English.

Parcher by this time had begun to regard his friend as a lunatic and remembering that lunatics should be humored, suggested as calmly as possible, that boys most generally fell in love with girls.

Oh yes! he remembered now. He was in love with a girl. His heart began to flutter and that was a sure sign, but who was he in love with? It surely was Elsie Smith. But his heart sank. Certainly it was Genevieve, Edna Shiffer or possibly Alice Long. But no, his heart answered to none of these. Maybe it was — oh yes! It was May Marsh. His heart thumped most violently and then quieted. He was coming out of his reverie. The mystery was solved. His soul was expanding like a flower and purring like a well tickled cat. Never in his life had he gone through such an experience. The sensation was intoxicating. Yes, it was May now and Vivian is forgotten.

Seniors Fifteen Years Hence

Avanelle Gidley — Head of Woman's Physical Training Department of N. H. S. Has produced one of the best Girls' Basketball Team ever known.

Harry Moore — Regretting that he ever said on February 12, 1916, "Miss Stafford doesn't give very long civics lessons."

Jessie Narigon — Pressing Virgil's overall suit so he will look nice when he comes to Nodaway to a band concert.

Inez Moser — Dean of Nodaway High School. She is a strict officer and has expelled many for bad behavior.

Ida Devers — Corraling the suffragettes of Nodaway, trying to get them to "oust" Avanelle Gidley from the Woman's Suffragette Club, because she so intentionally alienated the affections of her life-long friend, Casey Jones.

Ruth Windom — Now a militant suffragette walking down Fifth Avenue, New York, carrying an Eskimo dog under one arm, and waving a broom stick ferociously at all men.

William Gibson — Once in love with Tennyson's "Enoch Arden," but now a famous judge in the supreme court saying, "Ruled out. It's Enid Copeland."

Ralph Cramer — Assistant instructor in horticulture at State Agricultural School. Special attention given to "Blanchology."

Jokes

Miss McCall (in Physical Geog.)—"Berton, give a good description of water."

This is what he wrote—"Water is a white liquid which turns completely black, the moment you put your hands in it."

Bill was playing war with the pillows. His mother kept calling him to breakfast. At last, growing impatient, she took a stick and started up stairs. Bill, engaged in his battle, was saying, "Now France is beating; now its Germany," and looking up he saw his mother. He crawled under the bed and said, "here comes America and she always 'beats'."

Mr. Everett—"Avanelle, which is the best way to hire a hand, by the month, season or year?"

Avanelle—"By the year, because they take more interest."

Miss Stafford—"What little boy in the class can mention a memorable date in Roman History?"

Franz C.—"Antony's date with Cleopatra."

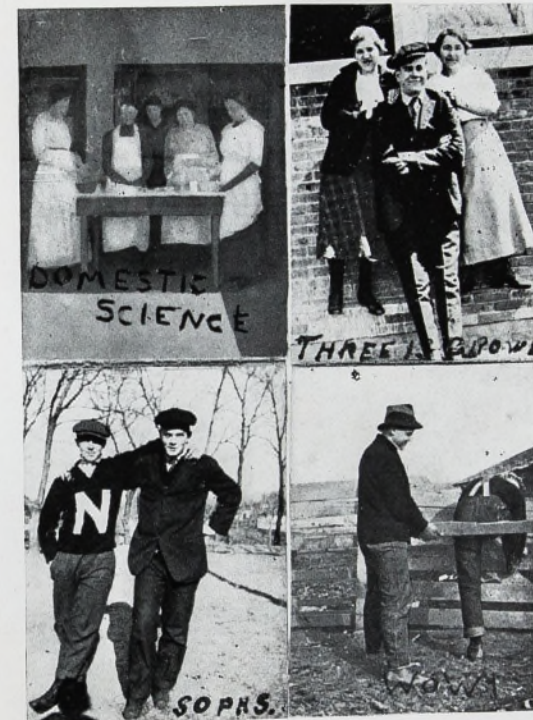

Harry M. (in History)—"Miss Stafford, I see where they now have a 'Blue Cross,' to take care of the wounded horses when they are killed."

Ralph C. (Suddenly)—"I have plenty of money, that's incorrectly used."

HARRY MOORE '16

GUENDOLINE GIBSON '16

Harry E. Moore plead the cause of the benighted race, in that master piece of oratory, "Intervention for Cuba." The young artist delivered this selection with so clear and forceful an expression, that he deserved well the honors which the judges conferred upon him, — winner of first prize.

Gwendoline Gibson deserves honorable mention as winner of second place over all. She read that dramatic piece, "As the Moon Rose," and so successfully did she render this selection that she carried the audience in every word and gesture.

Declamatory Contest

The growing interest in public speaking and debating suggested to the faculty early in the fall of 1915 that there might be a talent for oratory or dramatic art lying dormant in the intellect of some of our home boys and girls. To apply the drawing out process would be only one step toward the development of these hidden treasures, and to afford declamatory work could not fail to be beneficial in every respect.

So it was with these ideas in mind the plans for a mid-winter contest were discussed pro and con. At the onset there seemed to be few who were sufficiently interested to be willing to sacrifice time for training. Some lacked enthusiasm because the idea was entirely foreign to them, but as the plans for the contest began to materialize, one after another joined the ranks until there were thirteen in all. Three of this number, however, were compelled because of sickness to drop from the list even before actual training began, but still there were ten eager contestants in the race for honors.

On February 14, Mrs. Ida C. Robb of Creston began the training for the contest. As the students were merely beginners in the declamatory work, she found several "back woods preachers" and others whom she considered almost hopeless. But with the most careful and diligent training for one week Mrs. Robb was able to produce a decided change in the character of the work. Each contestant made such a marked improvement, that at the last rehearsal there was a question in the minds of those who had watched the progress of the work, just who would have the honor of winning first over all.

So with this narrow margin existing, ten pupils from "our little school" gave the first declamatory contest in the history of the institution. The high grade work done in the rendering of each selection showed the careful preparation which had been made. There was no doubt but that each student did exceedingly well, and truly deserved the applause given them. But throughout the contest, the gradings of the three judges were so close that in order to make the final decision, they were compelled to total the per cents. Harry E. Moore in sum total won first over all, the prize was a five dollar gold piece. Gwendoline Gibson took second over all, which entitled her to the two dollar and a half prize.

The Victorian Literary Society

The Victorian Society was organized early in the fall of 1915. The primary object of this organization was to develop in the student the art of speaking in public. This was accomplished by various means. For a while every member took a few minutes each alternate morning and acquired the power of talking before the school. Later came the programs that were rendered each month, where they not only appeared before the school, but also their parents and others interested in school activities. True it is, at first, the paper of the new debator shook, his knees smote together and the voice of the timid singer trembled. But we enjoyed it all. Each was willing to do his part, all were interested in the different phases of literary work so we came out victorious in the end. All have gained a better choice of words, realized a broader knowledge of current problems, and more systematic methods of research. Each feels as if he has gained some practical good that he can well apply in the discharge of the duties that are sure to fall upon him.

The eliminating of the inter-society debate chilled our fondest hope of making our prowess felt as a worthy competitor for the penant.

The society has lived up to the name of "Victorians" by defeating its "Athenian" brethren in the annual contest for the basketball championship. We are still confident of stamping the name indelibly upon the records of the closing year by handing them the same friendly compliment when it comes to baseball.

A. EVERETT.

Athenian Literary Society

On the fifteenth day of September, 1915, an event of greatest importance passed into the annals of history. This most noteworthy event was the organization of the Athenian Society of the Nodaway High School. For this reason, September the 15th, 1915 will be remembered until the earth shall cease to revolve on its axes, until the stars shall fade from the midnight heavens and time shall be no more.

From the various names suggested at our first business meeting, the name Athenian was adopted because we wished to represent the best in our high school as Athens did in the Ancient world. With this ideal always in mind we hoped to accomplish great things. In every line of work in which we took an active part our ideal has been nobly and bravely pursued.

The aim of the society has been to create a spirit of friendly rivalry and thus to bring out the best in athletics as well as in literary work. Then too, we desired not only to accustom the individual to appearing before an audience with some ease and self possession, but also to train him to collect his thoughts and ideas and to present them to an audience with as much force as possible. We feel satisfied that we have not entirely failed in our purpose.

In order to accomplish our aim various means were employed. During the first four months of school the Athenians gave a short program each morning of alternate weeks. When the members had attained some ability in the art of public speaking, an open program was given. This was followed a few weeks later by a joint program of both societies. The last public performance staged by the society was a program celebrating the birthday of St. Patrick, the saviour of Ireland. The work done by the individuals on these programs was highly commendable and worthy of great praise. Thus in our literary work our ideal, Athens has been carefully followed.

Success not only crowned our efforts in literary work but also in athletics. Although the boys suffered a disastrous defeat at the hands of their rivals the Victorians, the girls retrieved this defeat by carrying away the big end of the score when they met the Victorian girls on the basketball floor. We hope to repeat this victory on the baseball diamond this spring and we sincerely trust that the boys will avenge their defeat when they match baseball games with their opponents. We certainly have sufficient cause to be proud of the place the Athenian Society holds in high school athletics. The star positions on both boys' and girls' basketball teams were filled by members of that society and we trust that this reputation will be retained during the baseball season. (MISS) KATHERINE STAFFORD.

Girls' Basket Ball Team

The girls' team of N. H. S. is certainly one of the surprises of the season. With only one of the team ever before participating in the game, the team has developed into one which is able to cope with schools of far its superiority.

If the following teams advance like the past one, we are sure of success for N. H. S.

Personnel of Basket Ball Team

Everett, Albert (Coach) — Let us not fail to mention Coach Everett's name here, for he played a great part in preparing the team for this past season of success.

Taylor, Myron, '18 — "Pete," our manager grand, plays forward, and, although short, he fulfills his position with a master ability. He is one of the quickest men on the team. If he continues as in the past, his athletic career is assured.

Copeland, Franz, '18 — "Cope" also has an official distinction, being captain. He plays wild guard, and a mighty good one he is too. He is also "there" with his basket shooting, and is a valuable asset to the team.

Gibson, William, '1 — "Bill, the 6' 1" of the squad, held down the position of stationary guard the former part of the season, and that of center the latter. He plays either position very well. Much to its woe, the team loses this tall center by graduation.

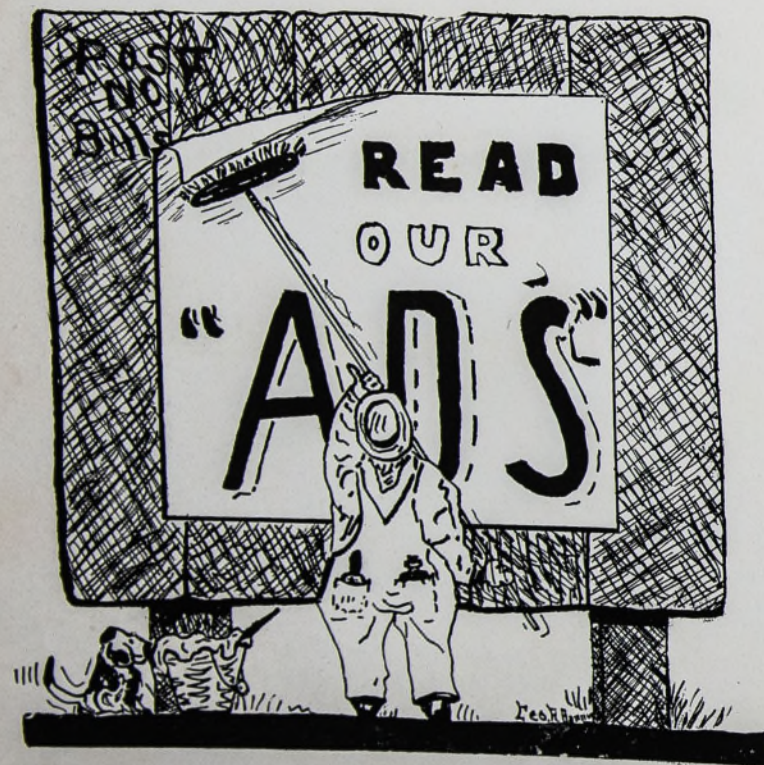

Willet, Clyde, '18 — "Willet," the fast forward of this fine team, is always in glory when he shoots one of his "long ones," which is a common occurrence. He is a fast floor man.

Jarman, Paul, '19 — "Sim" plays guard for N. H. S. and the ability with which he does so is wonderful. He is the only Freshman on the team, and we expect much of him before graduation.

Moore, Harry, '16 — "Mutt" plays sub. but often gets into the game, and when he does, woe be unto the opposing team. The team loses this fast little forward by graduation.

Eastlack, Francis, '18 — "Snyder" plays sub. guard and also gets into the game quite often, with amazing results for N. H. S. Snyder is sure of the 1917 team.

What Is Your Aim In Life?

You should start early in life to lay plans for your life's work: that work from which you hope to obtain a living, and also a high standing in the community in which you live.

In order to accomplish these things it is necessary to have money. The first fundamental essential necessary then is work: some sort of work to which you believe yourself to be adapted.

Having chosen your vocation and begun the slow process of making a living the next matter to be considered is that of saving a part of what you earn. That is where the bank can help you by furnishing you with a systematic plan for conserving your savings, and also with their counsel and advice.
